

Sarah Isal

Sarah is an independent consultant specialising in European equality, anti-discrimination and diversity. She has extensive research and policy experience in fields as diverse as racist violence, ethnic minority women, criminal justice and European anti-discrimination legislation. Her latest work has included research for the Northern Ireland Council for Ethnic Minorities on the situation of Black and Minority Ethnic Women in Northern Ireland. She recently conducted an evaluation of the Open Justice Initiative's project on ethnic profiling in Europe. Prior to that, Sarah worked for 12 years at the Runnymede Trust, Britain's leading race equality think tank, where she was Deputy Director and ran the European and international programme, as well as the Trust's criminal justice programme.
